Britain, made attractive to Arab investors because of the economic problems caused when Arah producers quadrupled the price of oil after the 1973 Middle East war, got a large share of the wealth that flooded into the Arab world. Zaire Visit For Neto

Mobutu has accused Angola of helping the Angolan-based Zairean rebels who invaded Shaba province twice in the past 18 months. Mr. Neto has replied that Zaire was still supporting Angolan guerrillas op-posed to his government.

The reconciliation between the Marxist Angolan leader and West-ern-leaning Zairean president is of great importance to Mr. Mobutu. Western nations had urged him to liberalize his government, curb corruption and seek reconciliation with Angola and with political op-ponents in exchange for a long-term economic and financial assistance plan that Mr. Mobutu has requested.

Amnesty Announced

Mr. Mobutu has already announced an amnesty for political opponents living abroad and freed several political prisoners. In Brazzaville, the two countries agreed July 22 to normalize their relations. to let refugees from either country return bome and to re-open the Benguela railroad for Zaire exports. Angola made a gesture in the re-conciliation process last week by announcing that Zaire rebels living in Angolan camps will be disarmed and pulled back 150 miles from the Zairean border.

Re-opening of the Benguela railway, which runs from Shaba to the Angolan port of Lobito on the Atlantic coast, is of prime importance for Zairean exports of minerals, such as copper, cobalt and man-

Before Angolan independence, Zaire moved its mineral exports over the Benguela railway to Lobito in 12 days. The railway was damaged in the Angolan civil war and has since been closed to Zairean exports.

It takes Zaire 45 days to move the minerals along its national route to the Zaire port of Matadi, or a month to export them via South Africa.

Zaire is the world's sixth exporter of copper with about 450,000 tons a year, but Zairian sources have said that barely 300,000 tons bave been shipped via the other routes in the past year.

The country is the world's major cobalt exporter with more than 10,000 tons. Part of the cohalt has been flown out, while the manganese production - about 360,000 tons a year - has been stockpiled in

Official Optimism

Zairian officials have been optimistic about prospects for the Sha-ba mining operations. The company which markets Zaire's copper said that the mines, which were paralyzed by the occupation of the copper town of Kolwezi by rebels last May, are back at 90 percent of their normal production. This will enable the national Gecamines mining company to honor all con-tracts, the officials said. After the Shaba events, deliveries had to be cut by 50 percent.

The Angolan decision to remove the rebels from the border may help Zaire bring foreign experts back to Shaba. Zairian authorities have said that, since the mines were reopened after the Shaba events in May, they have been operated mainly by local technicians.

Labor union sources in Belgium have said the mining company has sent letters of notice to about 90 percent of the 350 Belgian technicians and 80 percent of about 100 Freneb technicians repatriated to Europe after the rebel occupation

Although the mining company could lay off the technicians, the sources said that the unions may fight this since they did not leave by their own will but were forced to did not react. do so by exceptional circumstances. The Lunda, largest of Zaire's 250 tribes, live in southern Shaba province. No Lunda Left

Their complaints are not without foundation. In March, Gen. Mobutu ordered 13 army officers from Shaba shot after a show trial. In April, he purged most of the re-maining Shaba officers from the military. By the time of the invasion, no Lunda was left in a posi-tion of high authority, in either the government or the military.

Ironically, it was the French and Belgian troops dispatched to Shaba to rescue the European expatriates who saved Shaba — and Gen. Mobutu as well.

Nathaniel Mbumba, 37, a former chauffeur at a brewery, who claimed to speak for the invaders. "We are merely regrouping for the next coup. We will continue the border elashes until a general revolution ensues."

Despite the threat, Shaba has been relatively quiet since an inter-African peacekeeping force arrived here. Copper production has resumed in Rolwezi, and the military situation has stabilized. About 1,500 alleged civilian dissidents have been rounded up by Gen. Mobutu's henchmen and flown north to a "re-education camp" at Locandu in Kivu province, where Red Cross attempts to check on their well-being bave failed.

Attacks on the council's contro-versial program to combat racism, which in the last nine years has given nearly $1.5 million in grants to a variety of self-styled liberation orpanizations in southern Africa, is hardly new.

criticism is coming from some of the most steadfast defenders of the council and the program, many of whom are torn between their dismay over the grant and their loyalty to the council and its goal of combatting racism.

Tehran toppled Premier Mossadegh and paved the way for the shabit return to the throne.

According to widely published accounts, the demonstrations were organized and financed by the CIA in a plan carried out on the spot by one of its best agents, Kermit (Kim) Roosevelt, a cousin of the President Frank.

The CIA believed at the time that a Communist takeover of Iran by the pro-Moscow Tudeh Party was imminent, and the agency's then-director Allen Dulles, was determined to prevent such development at all compound former CIA officials have been quoted as saying. Although Premismossadegh's "National Front" regime was not Communist itself, it was seen as open to subversion and eventual overthrow by the Tudeh Commi

"The plot is quite clear - to run Iran into an 'Iranestan.'

He was referring to recurring anti-government violence in fran this year and to fears that the Soviet Union to the north aims to turn his county into a satellite state. This kind of appeal to Iranians' deep scated resentment of foreign don-ination is basically a propaganda ploy commonly used by all sides in the present conflict. Diplomats say members of the outlawed Tudeh Party and radical terrorist groups have an interest in fueling the violence, but there is no evidence they are instigating it or are immediately involved in

Anti-West Sentiments

Instead, there are fundamental economic reasons for the current unreal which is being channeled by some reactionary elements of Iran's powerful Moslem clergy into growing anti-Western and anti-minority sentiment There is also increasing opposition to the shah's government by political liberals, but basically, economists say, the recent waves of widespread rioting across fran are the work of "little people" lashing out against inflation, unemployment, unequal distribution of wealth and corruption

"A year ago you wouldn't have found all these people to go rioting." veteran economic analyst said. They would have been working in the construction boom. Today, the construction sector is down sharply and the average daily wage for its unskilled laborers has declined from more than $10 to about 57. In a country with 55 percent adult illiteracy, construction is a key employment sector for unskilled people who cannot be absorbed in indus-"In the long term, the economic frustrations will feed this kind of

Hoped to Profit From Story

Supporter of Ray Alibi Says It Was Phony

By Nicholas M. Horrock WASHINGTON, Aug. 20 (NYT)

Assassinations has ended its initial interrogation of James Earl Ray by severing one fragile thread of corroboration for his claim that he did not kill Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in Memphis 10 years ago.
Last Wednesday Ray testified before the committee in a hope that his testimony and committee findings might lend public, if oot legal, support for his plea for a new trial.

But it was clear when the committee recessed after Ray's appearance Friday, until its November hearings, that neither his 38-page aliki oor a vigorous attack against alibi oor a vigorous attack against the committee by his lawyer. Mark Lane, would seriously crode the weight of evidence that Ray ooce admitted was sufficient to make him plead guilty to Dr. King's murder.

Although the entire three days of interrogation have chipped away at the 50-year-old convict's story, it was not until late Friday, after Ray had begun his trip back to prison in Tennessee, that the committee adremeased, that the committee administered a coup de grace to one key support of his story.

Io March, 1969, Ray pleaded guilty to the shooting of Dr. King, He was sentenced to 99 years in prison and is serving that sentence. Shortly after making his plea. Ray claimed that he had oot killed Dr. King. Ray said that he was at a gasoline station several blocks away at the time that Dr. King was shot at the Lorraine Motel. lo October, 1977, after Ray had beeo in prison for eight years, the National Enquirer newspaper pub-lished a story quoting Roy Cowden, a Memphis commodity salesman, who said that be saw Ray at a Texaco station in Memphis within minutes of the shooping of Dr. King. Mr. Cowden's account of the matter would have made it cearly impossible for Ray to have shot the civil rights leader.

A mooth later, in November, 1977, Mark Lane interviewed Mr. Cowden and taped the same story. Mr. Lane included the interview in a book be wrote with comedian Dick Gregory, entitled "Code Name Zorro.

Mr. Lane gave a transcript of his interview to the committee last year and has demanded that the committee and U.S. agencies investigate what he bas called "oew evidence.

False Evidence

The committee late Friday called Mr. Cowden to the stand. The 44year-old former store manager tes-tified that the information he had given the National Enquirer and Mr. Lane was a fabrication prepared at the urging of a Memphis private detective, Renfro Hays. According to Mr. Cowden, he was at home in Port Neches, Texas, more than 400 miles from Memphis, on the night that Dr.

Mr. Cowden testified that in December, 1974, Mr. Hays con-cocted the story of an alibi winess for Ray in bopes of "making a millioo dollars."

Mr. Cowden said that he had been supported for several months by Mr. Hays and felt deeply in his debt and added that Mr. Hays had promised him that if the story or movie rights of his allegation made money. "I will always take care of

Carter Misread Dollar's Link to Inflation, Trade Gap

By Clyde Farnsworth

through the front entrance of the WASHINGTON, Aug. 20 (NYT) - The gravest dollar crisis since former President Richard Nixon slapped wage and price controls and an import surcharge on an unsuspecting oation seven years ago has the Carter administration with its back to the wall.

President Carter has twice in 1ecent days expressed deep concern about the dizzying fall of the dollar in the international currency markets and has promised steps to re-store fractured monetary confi-

Some sense of the urgency attached to improving the dollar's position was revealed by the extreme White House pressure applied to save a compromise that would lift U.S. price controls from newly produced oatural gas by 1985, and by an unusually sharp boost in the discount rate announced Friday by the Federal Reserve Board. Treasury Secretary Michael Blu-menthal said there will be a series of continuing dollar-defense actions as decisions are reached in the pext few weeks. How did the administration get itself into the monetary morass? Why does the international value of the dollar matter anyway? What more can Mr. Carter do?

Despite the warnings being souoded late last year, the administration underestimated the virulence of inflation and the potential dangers of the trade deficit, the two underlying forces behind the dollar's weakness.

The precipitous declines of the dollar against such currencies as the Japanese yen (30 percent in 12 months), the West German mark (15 percent) and the Swiss franc (33 percent) largely represent the stident of the factors in the unusually severe 1974-1975 recession.

Evidence such as huge Japanese and West German trade surpluses supports the theory that the low-inflanoo countries are the more efficient exporters.

A declining dollar increases the cost of U.S. imports and has other price effects that overall add I to 2 percentage points to the domestic inflation rate, economists calculate.

Because of the great volume of dollars swishing about in the world's financial markets (about a half trillion dollars worth), the United States cannot intervene oo an extensive scale to defend the dollar. Its reserves of foreign currencies are meager. Even if all the gold at Fort Knox were mobilized, the dollar could be swamped by

The Farber Case

The case of the New Jersey courts vs. Myron Farber and The New York Times has had some interesting repercussions, not the least of them being a crack in the united front traditionally maintained by the nation's press on the question of confidential sources. In a recent column in the Wall Street Journal. Vermont C. Royster disputed the conventional wisdom of the press, arguing that a reporter does not and should not have an absolute privilege to refuse to reveal confidential sources or notes. Columnists Joseph Kraft and Anthony Lewis have taken similar stands.

Mr. Royster offered a hypothetical case that leads inevitably to the position he advocated. Suppose a reporter has picked up. in confidence, a specific piece of information that would establish the innocence of someone accused of a crime; the defendant knows this and demands, with some precision, that the information be made available; there is a high probability that, with this evidence, the defendant could establish his innocence. What then? Mr. Royster argued that the reporter should be compelled by the courts to violate his confidence in the interest of the defendant's night to a fair thal.

It is almost a foregone conclusion that, as a matter of law, Mr. Royster's view would prevail. On the basis of prior decisions, the Supreme Court would be almost certain to rule that a reporter does not have a legal right to protect confidential sources or notes if it can be demonstrated with sufficient force and particularity that they are - or may be -- decisive to the outcome of a criminal case. Indeed we would find it hard to dispute that result either as a matter of law or of public policy, in a situation like the one Mr. Royster set out. But the key word is decisive, and that leaves much room for argu-

Consider, in the interest of expanding the argument, quite a different hypothetical case. Suppose that a government employee has evidence that a local prosecutor, police chief and mayor are accepting bribes from criminals. Fearful of losing his job or even his life if it becomes known he has such evidence and not trusting the authorities - the employee tells what he knows to a reporter after extracting a promise that his name will never be revealed. After verifying the information and publishing it, the reporter is called before a grand jury presided over by one of the prosecutor's assistants. When he refuses to reveal his source or his notes, he is taken before a judge who just happens to be an old political crony of the mayor. Must he tell all or go to jail for contempt? Too fanciful? No more so than Mr. Royster's hypothetical case. Ours leads also to an inevitable conclusion — but one that is precisely opposite his: We would conclude that a reporter should not be compelled to reveal sources when the result would be more likely to be retribution than justice - especially when you consider the wider effect on would-be sources if court-enforced betrayals of confidence by reporters become a matter we have outlined - that conscientious citizens would dare blow the whistle on public

Those two examples, at opposite ends of a wide range of possibilities, suggest why the Farber case and similar cases stir deep emotions. Those who believe, as do most judges. that the legal system is the sole repository of justice and virtue, tend to think about reporters' privilege in terms of a denial of the right to a fair trial. Those who are skeptical of the legal system's complete integrity, as are most reporters and newspapers, tend to think of the right to uphold the confidentiality of sources as central to the effective functioning of a free press. The right answer to the problem of confidential sources and information lies somewhere between those extremes. Reporters and newspapers should not be obstructions to justice. But neither should their investigative efforts be hobbled by an inability to offer confidentiality to their sources with any certainty that their word has enduring value.

Finding the proper balance between the competing interests is difficult, the more so since cases such as Mr. Royster's, or ours, are indeed hypothetical. Real life is rarely that clear cut - as witness the Farber case. Just to begin with, the defense lawyers who are seeking his notes and files have been required to make no showing that they have any reason to believe that something in those notes will help their client. They have not even been required to specify what they are seek-. ing. Their request, in other words, has many of the earmarks of an unacceptable fishing expedition. Moreover, the ruling of the trial judge that he must see all of Mr. Farber's notes before considering the First Amendment claim seems to ignore hints from the Supreme Court that he ought to be specific about what he wants to see. The Times, by resting its case so heavily on the First Amendment, has diverted attention from a strong Fourth Amendment argument against the sweeping nature of the defense request. Mr. Farber's book contract has also complicated the case in ways that further cloud the basic issue. And all this leaves aside the question of whether the New Jersey courts have given proper weight in this case to the state's 'shield law," which is supposed to protect reporters' confidences - not to mention the deeper question of whether such laws do not themselves diminish the pure force of the First Amendment's protections against abridgment of a free press.

The more we hear about the Farber case. in short, the less we like the idea of its becoming a test of anything having to do with fundamental First Amendment questions. It seems to us that the judge, Mr. Farber and The Times have become caught up in a hopelessly complex confrontation whose chief virtue, so far as we can see, is that it has forced journalists - and, we hope, judges - to recognize that these so-called "source" cases will sometimes require difficult judgments among competing values. For us, the rights and virtues of a free press are paramount, and we would argue for the strictest reading of the First Amendment in their behalf. But we cannot altogether exclude the possibility that, in a particular set of circumstances there be - in the atmosphere of corruption other rights, equally enshrined in the Constilution, might prevail.

Looking Back at Elvis

Which will seem more absurd to those who study our time, the nationwide flap in the 1950s that kept Elvis Presley's gyrating hips from being televised or the hysteria with which his fans last week commemorated the first anniversary of his death? Neither the 90degree heat nor the police strike that has otherwise paralyzed Memphis could diminish the fervor of about 10,000 disciples who streamed down Elvis Presley Boulevard, formerly U.S. 51, to worship at the gates of the 13-acre Presley estate.

There were mothers, no longer so young, dragging children togged out in Presley capes. There were wailing fans who half expected their departed hero to speak to them from above. There was the fast-food waitress who traveled hours by bus to win a last glimpse of -what?

Social historians will have to deal with

Elvis, the young truck driver from the poorest South who cut a record for his mom and was catapulted to fame and fortune. He had a Cadillac painted in pink, his mom's favorite color, not to mention two Stutz Blackhawks, a Ferrari, a jeep, six golf carts, two airplanes, a variety of motorcycles, tractors and mobile homes and a pickup truck - all manner of mechanical motion, deriving from the animal motion and pulse of his music.

A year after his death, in a steadily more permissive society, the Elvis legend bas, if anything, grown, and that will tell the histonans something. A drunken security guard in a power plant can black out all Memphis, but for $2 you could buy and carry a special Elvis candle. TCB, as it says on his tombstone, Taking Care of Business.

Behind the Albanian accusation against China and the pompous defenses of its own policies lies the hard fact that the country will find it difficult to exist economically without Chinese aid; in spite of the fact that this aid seems to have involved considerable problems over the years. When the Albanian party states that Tirana "has never been isolated and can never be so," this is merely reference to its alleged ties with various groups of frustrated revolutionaries around the world. If the Albanians reject a common front with China, Romania and Yugoslavia against the Soviet Union for reasons of independence, then Moscow's interest in Tirana might well increase.

OPENHAGEN — The admiradon of Europeans for American daring and enterprise surged briefly at the happy news of the first successful balloon flight across the Atlantic. The trio of American balloonists who made history in the light across the a Lindbergh tradition reminded the Old World that success is not just the result of technical know-how, but the willingness of iodividuals to

That emotional reaction is likely to be short-lived because the impression most Europeans have of the U. S. is tled directly to the state of the American dollar. One cartoonist summed up the mixed emo-tions with a drawing of the three intrepid balloonists banging out of their basket to read o giant sign in the earth below: "Welcome to France Latest exchange rate: Dol-

Most Americans at bome treat the dollar's "Carter collapse" as an abstraction - something that one is expected to cluck-cluck over but oot anything that affects the average man. American officials abroad join the tut-tuting without feeling the pinch: Their salaries are auto-manically adjusted to absorb the de-cline in the purchasing power of

Not Affordable

But every American tourist, lured abroad by the welcome reduction in air fares, suddenly is struck by the weakness of his cur-rency. What is affordable for the average German tourisi is oot af-fordable for the average American: a less-than-luxury botel room in London costs more than $50 a night, and a bottle of French wine in Copenhagen costs an American more than $6 in a liquor store.

OK, the complacent economists say, the American can stay home. That lessens our most direct presence in the world. Worse, the plunging dollar is the most dangerous form of protectionism: U.S. inflation is fed by the rising cost of imports as Toyota and Volkswagen prices soar out of American reach. and U.S. car manufacturers no longer have to bold their prices down to meet foreign competition.

Most important, respect for the United States as a world power and reliable ally diminishes abroad when the almighty dollar is revealed to be helpless and comp-tempuble. The value of the dollar is a daily vote by Europeans and Asi-ans on the stability of the U.S. economy and the competence of its management. For months, we have been witnessing a massive vote of no confidence.

What did Mr. Carter do to corrupt the integrity of our currency?
Worried most about the level of unemployment, the president would come to mean.

adopted policies that led to double digit inflation. Treasury Secretary Blumenthal, who was cheerfully talking down the dollar only last year, now suggests that in the next year, now suggests that in the next six months we should see the rate of inflation reduced to a mere? perceor—nearly double the rate that the Carter administration inherited. Second, the president concocted an alibit for letting our believe of name of company and deathy in balance of payments go deeply in the red. It was not his fault, he ex-plained, but the fault of the Congress for not passing an energy plan our energy needs.

Europe's leaders have bought this Carter alibi because it removes their responsibility for helping to support a central currency—doeso't the American president doeso't the American president agree that there is no hope for the dollar until the U. S. Congress adopts his plan? Europeans like to roar along their autobabns at 75 miles an hour and deplore the energy profligacy of the United States, the only country with a national speed limit of 55 miles per hour. Third President Carter fired Ar-

Third, President Carter fired Arthur Burns, whose sagacity and determination was trusted by the world's central bankers, and replaced him at the Federal Reserve with William Miller, who followed White House orders and voted against a necessary rise in interest rates. Despite this populist protest, the rates rose. Mr. Miller now has had to admit how wrong bis decision was by recommending another increase in interest rates to belp defend the dollar.

What to Do

Europe's bankers, who saw British inflation sharply reduced after the International Monetary Funcdemanded spending cuts and belt-uightening, know what America must do to rescue its dollar and restore world confidence in U.S. eco nomic power.

Tax cuts to stimulate capital in

The Carter admir. istration should be willing to accera mild recession now - with , t say the unsayable, some rise to ur employment — to stimulate productivity and to avert a hair-curling recession and whopping unemploy ment later.

This requires the kind of political courage that Mr. Carter has not ye shown, and the kind of econom realism that the Blumenthal-Mill clique does not possess.

The tribinal gains than in peace. He has both an unsettled political situation and a troubled economy at home. Sadat's demands for concessions before the resumption of direct talks could not have been met had not the American invitation intervened. And that invi-tation was couched in such a way that the Israelis, always sensitive to any hiot of an "imposed" settlement, could continue to regard President Carter as a "mediator" even if Sadat believes him now a "full partner."

Another Reason

If Carter's personal perceptions of the Israeli and Egyptian leaders are accurate, there is another reason to hope for at least some movement toward peace at Camp David. Carter regards Sadat as highly flexible in private, no matter what he says in public — so flexible, in fact, that even a limited Israeli concession on the difficult West Bank question might be sufficient for

The president sees Begin, on the other hand, as being no more flexi-ble in private than he is in public; the line be takes at news conferences is the line be takes in man-to-man talks with Carter. The presi-dent nevertheless believes that Begin deeply and sincerely wants peace, so much so that he once broke into tears as he discussed this "lifelong dream" at Carter's dinner table.

Folly

The Carter administration already has reached the wise conclusion that it would be folly to try to maneuver Begin out of power; the mere effort rallies Israeli support for him, and the worst case would arise if the effort somehow succeeded. Change in Lisbon Regime jump from dictatorship to democracy has meant an unexpected homecoming for many Portuguese. But for others it means an unwelcome diaspora.

'Almost a million near-destitute Portuguese refugees have streamed back into this impoverished coun-try from Angola, Mozambique and Guinea-Bissau since leftist military officers overthrew the Salazar-Caetano dictatorship in 1974 and freed Portugal's African colonies.

But as the colonial refugees poured into Portugal, straining the country's resources and worsening unemployment, many of Portugal's richest and most talented citizens, who had been the mainstay of its economy, fled into exile.

Some feared reprisals because of their association with the fallen fascist regime. But most decided that they had a better future in such places as Brazil, France and Switzerland, particularly because Portugal's oew leftist rulers were expropriating the companies that the wealthy and talented owned or worked for, and the economy appeared to be crumbling.

Famous Portuguese business families who left include the Melos, who owned the country's biggest industrial complex, the Campanhia Uniao Fabril, now nationalized: the Espirito Santos, whose bank, also oationalized, still bears their name; and the Champalimands, couple who dominated insurance and the Manager cement manufacture.

Between 10,000 and 20,000 civil what is servants, executives and technicians also left the country, futher depletinvestiving its already slim reserves of managerial talent and skilled labor.

Portugal's new democratic rulers have dealt much better than most observers expected with the stresses created by the influx of refugees from Africa, which in a few months raised the country's population 8 percent. By comparison, the French settlers who came back from Algeria in the 1960s amounted to barely Process 1 percent of France's population.

Officially, the retornados, as the African refugees are called, no longer constitute a problem. Only 15,000 are still considered out of work, and the government plans to close at the end of the year its crash $300 million program to find them jobs and houses.

Rodrigues Mariana Lopes is a case in point. Now 53 years old, Mr. Lopes, who comes from the Cape Verde Islands, went from Lisbon to Angola in 1948 without a penny to his name. His first farming business was destroyed in Portugal's long war against nationalist guerrillas there. Last year he returned to Lisboo almost penniless again, after seeing his successful pubbe-relations firm in Luanda straogled by the Marxist regime of Agostinho Neto.

Now he owns another flourishing public-relations firm here and is working on plans for a $1 million hotel complex with other refugee partners. "Work bard and oever think of failure" is his philosophy.

'We Help Each Other'

Mr. Lopes admits that his approach to business is cliquish, and that his success excites the jealousy of the Portuguese. All his friends and business partners are retorna-dos, as are his employees. "We help each other because we went through the same experiences," be

Because of their success, "somehow it's always our papers that get lost," he says, complaining also about frequent visits he receives from the tax

Local Portuguese also blame the retornados for the recent rise in street crime, drugs and prostitution in what used to be one of Europe's more peaceful and law-abiding countries.

Although Portugal has absorbed its African refugees more easily than most people expected, the country is still suffering from "the talent drain" of the last couple of

Mauritania Talks Peace as Time Passes

By John Darnton

NOUAKCHOTT. Mauritania (NYT) — The military government that seized power in this West African country last month says that it wants to end a protracted war against Algerian-backed guerrillas in the desert wastes of the Western

But how peace will be achieved in a conflict involving power rivalries among Morocco, Algeria and France is far from clear,

Morocco and Mauritania annexed the Western Sahara, a former Spanish colony, in an agreement struck with Spain in November, 1975. The partition was vigorously opposed by Algeria, which has supplied Soviet-made arms and a staging area for be-tween 5,000 and 10,000 guerrillas belonging to the Polisario Front, an indigenous force fighting for inde-

Although it is one of the least habitable places on earth, the 100,000-square-mile strip of blazing desert cootains what are thought to be the world's biggest phosphate deposits, with reserves estimated at 1.7 billion tons, and valuable coastal fishing waters.

Last year the Polisario announced its intention to destroy the ecocomie base of Mauritania, the weaker of its two enemies. Beginning in October, they attacked the 400-mile railroad that curves south and west to the sea outside the Westero Sahara border from Zouerate, the iron mining center that brings in 80 per cent of Mauritania's export earnings.

Economic Ruin

Despite protection by French-manned Jaguar jets, which began air strikes against the Polisario in December, the railroad has been knocked out four times this year. In the first six months of the year, it hauled 3.1 million tons of iron ore, well below the 4.2 million tons required just to break even.

With armed forces that grew from 2,000 to 14,000 men in only five years, and with military expenditures eating up 65 per cent of the national budget, Mauritania faced economic ruin. The scene was set for the military to overthrow President Moktar Ould Daddah, a French-trained lawyer who had ruled since independence from France in 1960.

Because Mr. Daddah was deeply committed to retaining Mauri-tania's sector of the Western Sahara, the southern third, his removal was deemed essential by the Polisario as a first step toward peace. His replacement by a military jun-ta, led by Lt. Col. Mustapha Ould Mohammed Salek, has set off repercussions from Rabat to Paris,

Two days after Mr. Daddah was overthrown on July 10, the Polisar-io declared a cease-fire on its operations in Mauritania proper, "as a gesture of goodwill and a desire not to increase tension." It was an opportunity, the independence movement said, for the new Mauritanian government "to revise the criminal position of the deposed head of state."

Thankful for the respite, the new vernment has made more forceful statements about its desire for peace, but always adding the proviso that peace must come "in consultation with our Moroccan broth-

Paris Publisher Is Indicted for Mesrine Article

PARIS, Aug. 20 (AP) — Paris-Match publisher Daniel Filipacehi has been indicted for publishing an interview with a French fugitive which the court said was a justification of the crimes of robbery and

Mr. Filipacchi was indicted last Thursday by Judge Emile Cabie. The indictment allows French anthorities to open a full investiga-tion, but this does not always lead to prosecution, legal experts said. If the publisher is prosecuted and convicted, he faces a maximum penalty of one to San area in action penalty of one to five years in prison and a fine of $72 to $72,000.

The interview in question, published in the Aug. 4 edition of the weekly Paris-Match, was with Jacques Mesrine, the subject of an intensive manhunt. On May 8, Mesrine escaped from a Paris prison where he was serving 20 years for a series of armed boldups.

With the interview, Mr. Filipacchi issued a statement condemning Mesrine's activities and saying that be was publishing the interview in the public interest.

talks with the Polisario had not yet taken place, although contacts had been made through intermediaries in Libya, Algeria and France. Stressing that all sides must compromise, he appeared loath to relinquish Mauritania's territorial claim over the southern sector of the Western Sahara, suggesting instead that a federation might link the two - a solution that is not apt to be acceptable to the guerrillas.

Evasive Reply

While attending the summit confereoce of the Organization of Afri-can Unity in the Sudan last month, the foreign minister was called in to meet President Houari Boumedienne of Algeria, who asserted that Algeria had no claim on the disputed region or its phosphates, and was supporting the Polisario oul of respect for the principle of self-

Mr. Laghdaf reportedly replied evasively that Mauritania, too, was eager for peace and would like to explore the possibility at a later date, when the Ramadan religious holidays ended.

As the moment for peace negoti-ations slips by officials here appear to be waiting for others to start the process. "The ball is not in our court," said the new information minister. "We took the first step - we changed our government."

Mauritania is in a delicate position because Morocco, Algeria's rival for dominance in northwestern Africa, maintains a force of 10,000 troops in Mauritania. Moroccó, which gave up a territorial claim to all of Mauritania only nine years ago, would not look kindly upon a separate agreement giving Algeria influence on its southern flank. Discussions last week about removing 600 Moroccan troops from Akjout, only three hours from here by paved road, were protracted. The troops could easily have moved into the capital to back a pro-Moroccan countercoup. Eventually, the Moroccans agreed to move them farther to the north.

Bucking the Odds in Style, Italy Just Keeps Rolling Along

By Jack R. Payton

R OME (UPI) — By the accepted standards of modern industrial society Italy should not even exist.

its institutions are a shambles, its economy is sick, its laws are commonly disobeyed and it is beset by terrorist bands bent on tearing down what is left of established order.

Perhaps more disturbing, most of the nation's 56 million citizens seriously question whether anything can be done to improve the situation. Italy is viewed by Italians and foreigners alike as a nation coming apart at

Yet whatever the future may hold, Italy somehow is bucking the odds, compromising, meeting crises as they come, and surviving — as it has done in face of catastrophe for thousands of years. It just could be the testing ground for a new kind of politics and a new way to organize a modern industrial community.

Italian politicians, while not the most honest and efficient, are certainly among the cleverest. They are tackling the nation's seemingly insoluble problems with methods that have never been tried before, and their methods have sparked dehate throughout Europe, in Moscow and in Washing-

Italian industries, although facing Europe's toughest and most highly organized labor movement, still manage to produce competitive products known the world over for their quality and style.

Although the threat of terrorism and kidnapping has put an end to the dolce vita nightlife of the rich and famous, the average Italian can still enjoy the relaxed way of life so admired by the 15 million visitors who arrive each year to sample delights they cannot find at bome.

The three-hour lunch is still considered an essential part of life here, and so is a skiing vacation at mountain resorts such as Cortina D'Ampezzo, or a month on the beach at Capri or Amalfi.

Leisurely outdoor dining in a cobblestoned Renaissance square, simple food prepared with excellent ingredients and a carafe of wine pressed from grapes grown on a nearby hillside are pleasures available to almost

It has been said of Italians that their prime talent is surviving with style. that 2,000 years of tumultuous history have taught them how to negotiate their way through hard times.

Possible Coup

The last year has allowed them to display these talents in full measure. When five-time Premier Aldo Moro was kidnapped and killed by Red Brigades urban terrorists last spring, several leading politicians said that it was the end of the republic founded 32 years ago on the World War II ashes of Mussolini's fascism.

Italians in coffee bars and restaurants talked grimly of a possible military coup and predicted tanks in the streets the following morning. But none of that happened.

Mr. Moro's assassination left a critical vacuum at the center of the sbaky Christian Democratic-Communist alliance that runs this country, but it did not tear it apart as the Red Brigades hoped.

When Italy suffered its own Watergate-style scandal only a month later and President Giovanni Leone resigned in disgrace, there was almost none of the agonized soul-searching that attended President Riehard Nixon's departure from office in Washington.

The country's squabbling politicians put aside their differences, quickly elected n respected man to replace Mr. Leone, and then got down to the serious business of planning their summer vacations.

Like a veteran prizefighter. Italy's institutions and people are coming through their long ordeal scarred and bruised but perhaps better prepared than others to roll with the punches and make the inevitable adjustments. Italy's best known veteran — a one-man institution who has survived and adjusted with more style and success than any of the others — is 57year-old Giovanni Agnelli, chief of the multibillion dollar Fiat industrial

A former international playboy, Mr. Agnelli has settled down to become the wealthiest capitalist and largest private employer in a nation increasingly controlled by the Communist Party and its powerful trade union confederation.

The growth of Communist influence, according to Mr. Agnelli, bas been the central factor in Italian events for the last decade and will continue to be for some time.

"The old-fashioned rightist position of ignoring the existence of the Communist Party is ridiculous. It's unrealistic," Mr. Agnelli said in a recent magazine interview. "You can't run Italy against the Communist party and the trade unions. They are too powerful."

Indeed, the bargaining strength of the Italian trade unions, with their

of industrial labor relations traditional in the West.

It all started with the so-called "hot autumn" of 1969 when months of shrewdest politician in Italy and the most original Communist tactician in union agitation won workers hig wage increases and more clout in determining industry policy. Since then about half of the nation's major industrial enterprises have gone deep into debt and are threatened with bank-

Without prior planning, without adequate financial means, the Italian government has assumed control of a larger share of its industry than any other Western country.

"Italy has gone beyond Communism without even noticing it," says film producer Carlo Ponti, who became a French citizen with his wife Sophia Loren ten years ago. This in turn has loaded down the government with money-losing enterprises that have been a major factor in the country's colossal public debt. Although Mr. Agnelli's Fiat and other well-run private businesses still manage to produce quality products and turn profits, they must contend with social and political demands from the unions as well as bread-andhutter issues of wages and fringe benefits.

This is because the major force in the labor movement is the Communist-controlled General Confederation of Italian Labor, which represents half of industrial workers. "It's all touch and go," Mr. Agnelli says of Italy's remaining private enterprise.

The rise of the trade unions and the transformation of Italy's industrial landscape would not have been possible without the growing strength of the Italian Communist Party, the largest in the West with 1.8 million

Led by able strategists, the Communists bave managed to gain ground.

Under Mr. Berlinguer, the Communists shed their old Stalinist image, promised to respect Italy's multiparty democracy and collected 12.6 milion votes in the 1976 national elections.

This gave them 34.5 percent of the vote — four percentage points less than the ruling Christian Democrats - and opened the way for a formal Communist role in the parliamentary majority for the first time in more than three decades.

Mr. Berlinguer is the creator of what has become known as Eurocommunism, and has been pushing the Christian Democrats to join the Communists in a formal government coalition he calls "the historic compro-

As Mr. Berlinguer explains it, the presence of the Christian Democrats in such a government would guarantee the continued existence of democracy and forestall a possible military coup or international interference.

Compromise

ft is no coincidence that the Communist leader unveiled his "historic compromise" proposal soon after a military coup backed by the CIA toppled Socialist President Salvador Allende in Chile.

In the process of seeking the compromise, the Communists have had to jettison - at least publicly - some of the key doctrines that they inherited from their Soviet forebears. The terms "dictatorship of the proletariat" and "Marxist-Leninist" have been quietly dropped from the party vocabulary. The Italian party sharply criticized the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968 and has been critical of recent trials of Soviet dissidents. Policy-makers in Washington are not entirely convinced. "We don't

In addition to their power on the national level, local Communist administrations watch over the lives of 29 million Italians, or 52 percent of the population.

Carabinieri Force

The far-leftist gang leaders believe that the Communists have betrayed the revolutionary cause. The Red Brigades has said often that its aim is to trigger a violent revolution that would bring Mr. Berlinguer's Communist back to their senses.

Italy's main instrument in making sure that doesn't happen bus been the 90,000-member carabinieri paramilitary police force, the country's most highly trained and organized antiterrorist weapon. But even the carabinieri and other special police units have been unable to make: serious dent in terrorist activity.

Novelist Morris West, a longtime resident of Italy, maintains that the Red Brigades and similar groups "have succeeded in their sinister purpose of spreading confusion and fear, of destroying the last vestiges of public confidence, Terrorism and the record wave of kidnappings often associated with it

But the Mayor Promises Protection Measures

In Madrid, Drivers Show Little Concern for the Safety of Pedestrians

By Stanley Meisler

MADRID — Mayor Jose Luis Alvarez has announced a "plan for the protection of the pedestrian" in Madrid. This pedestrian welcomes the plan but has few hopes for it.

Walking the streets of Madrid is a hazardous venture. I have not What happened when read the traffic code, but no matter what it says there is little doubt that pedestrians never have the right of way. A comie short playing in the local movie houses shows a blind man trying to cross a Madrid street at a zehra-striped crosswalk. Every time he steps into the crosswalk cars drive him back. Finally, another handicapped Spaniard, a mute, takes the blind man by the arm and walks him down the crosswalk. They are both run over.

Things are not really that bad. but they are bad enough. Drivers do not slow down nt pedestrian erosswalks unless they feel forced to do so. They often will blow their horns furiously at persons during to cross. Only if the pedestrian is brave enough to keep on walking will the angry driver stop his car.

Yellow Lights

Yellow traffic lights present a problem. These traffic lamps show a green light to pedestrians and a vellow light to the oncoming cars. A car is supposed to proceed cautiously on yellow, and only if no pedestrians are crossing the street. But most drivers treat a yellow signal as if it were green. I once say an old woman stranded in the middle of a boulevard as she tried to cross with a green pedestrian light in her favor. The first two lanes of traffic had stopped for her, but the third and fourth lanes simply roared through the yellow light.

Red lights can be just as danger ous. Once a red light flashes, driv ers who see it figure that they still have about 15 seconds to zip through the intersection. On the other hand, drivers who do stop at a red light feel that they have the right to start into the intersection a few seconds before the light turns green. These intitudes, of course, are contradictory, often provoking loud horn blowing and sometimes a crash.

For the pedestrian, the hazards of this nuwritten rule are obvious. Even when the lights are in his fa-vor he still must hold back until all cars are truly stopped. And then be must run the gauntlet of drivers gunning the motors of their cars in the hours of control of the cars in

Then, too, some pedestrians are as lackadaisical about traffic lights and rules as the motorists. A driver may not feel like slowing down for one pedestrian at a crosswalk when another pedestrian has forced him

A taxi driver recently entered a special lane that was prohibited to all vehicles but huses. "This is a bus lane," he said, "but now that was prohibited to all vehicles but huses. In the last few months, city officials have started to deal with Madrid's traffie prohlems. To clear central Madrid of congestion, a campaign was launched against illegal parkers. Police began applying the cepo — a yellow clamp — to the wheels of offending cars. To for move the clamp, the owner must go to the nearest police station, pays fine and return with a policemen and a key. Many motorists, even those who had parked on side walks, complained that this was an unjust and improper infringement of their civil rights in a democracy hut the police bave kept clamping on the cepos anyway.

City officials also moved to elim inate some of the traffie risks. Mr. Alvarez announced his "plan for the protection of the pedestrian" For instance, a few historical, narrow old streets that have been pro visionally off limits to cars for the last few years would now be permanently off-limits. More important Mr. Alvarez said, the city would spend $35,000 on a survey to find out what the people of Madrid be lieved should be done about their traffic and the problems of pedesstrians.

But even if the plan fails, there still is hope. The editors of the Madrid newspaper El Pais recently fed the rate of increase of registered cars in Madrid — about 500 a day — and the total widths of all the streets of the city into a computer The computer concluded that the cars would use up every available ineb of space in Madrid at o clock on the morning of Nov. 25. 1980. On that day, we pedestrian can pick our way past hundreds of thousands of blocked cars and funing drivers with impunity. Los Angeles Times

Prague a Decade After Invasion: A Mood of Dour Resignation

By David A. Andelman DRAGUE (IHT) - Czechoslovakia, its soul

I scarred by 10 years of Soviet occupation, is rebuilding its economy, its political and social structure, even its cultural life, with the dow resignment. nation that is so much a part of the Czechoslovak character.

Quietly, as belits the heavy police effort to insure calm — Czechoslovaks are marking in their hearts, and in quiet gatherings far from the centers of power, the 10th anniversary of the Soviet-led

But Czechoslovakia today is vastly different from the nation that tens of thousands of Warsaw Pact troops occupied in their lightning strike in 1968, curifug short the brief period of liberalization known as the "Prague Spring."

It is a country whose leadership tries every day to vindicate the armed force that dramatically changed the nation's direction. But the balance sheet is still not closed. For Czechslovakia and for Eastern Europe, but especially for the Soviet Union itself, 1968 was very much a two-edged sword. Cosmetically. Prague is little different from the cobblestoned medieval town that the Soviet para-troopers poured into shortly after midnight on Aug. 20-21, 1968. The gray-green Vitavn River still flows under the bridges King Charles ordered built six centuries ago. Czechoslovaks still awaken in the old town square and gaze out their windows at the tower where an alebemist once tried to turn lead into gold. But not much else is the same. The effort of vindication means "progress" to the government of Gustav Husak, installed by the Soviet leadership after they deposed Alexander Dubcek, the leader of Czechoslovakia during the Prague Spring. And progress means n new subway — the most elaborate in Eastern Europe — whose second line was opened in n star-studded ceremony last Saturday.

Progress means the six-lane superhighway link-

Progress means the six-lane superhighway link-ing Prague with the industrial metropolis of Bruo To the south and on to the Slovak provincial capital of Bratislava, the city to which Mr. Dubcek and Regime Continuing the 'Reconstruction' many of his associates were exiled. Progress also means a new Skoda car for every family, unlimited quantities of the fine pilsner beer and hearty Bohemian food - enough for everyone in what has become the most economically advanced nation in Eastern Europe. But the price was a high one. Last week, a Czech-emigre group in Munich, in a report called "Ten' Years of Soviet Terror" wrote that about 280,000 Czechostovaks lost their jobs between Jan. 1, 1970. and Dec. 31, 1973, as a direct result of their political sympathies.

Some diplomats believe that this is a modest figure. More than 300,000 lost their Communist Party membership cards in the years following the invasion, and tens of thousands of professors, writers, artists and filmmakers were reduced to streetcleaners, window-washers and coal stokers.

The once-vibrant Czech press and television became mindless extensions of party dogma. The works of the nation's premier plnywrights and novelists — Pavel Kohout, Vaclav Havel, Ivan Klima, Vaclav Havel, Ivan the book. Ludvik Vaculik — disappeared from the book-shops that still dot nearly every block, and from the theaters that were once the joy of even the smallest Czech or Slovak villages. About 350 Czechoslovak writers are officially banned from publishing within the country.

But that is not to say that this nation's intellectual life is dead. As the apparatus hegins to rehulld the economy and recruit new members to the all-powerful Communist Party, these same novelists and playwrights are quietly keeping alive the long tradition of Czechoslovakia's literature and the human-rights movement known as Charter 77. The Munich emigre report said that about 1,000 persons have been sentenced to prison terms of five years or more as a result of "political crimes"

They have suffered enormously for their efforts and for their parallel support for the Czechoslovak

Writers and artists have become resigned to the fact that their works will never reach any more than a handful of the Czechoslovak public through the Samizdat (underground) publishing enterprise known as Petlice (Padlock) press.

Over the past two weeks, most of the Petlice's authors left Prague, planning to mark the anniver-sary quietly at the tiny country bouses that some of them have managed to retain. They fear the wide-scale police roundups and "preventive detention" that accompanied the June visit to Prague of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and that has become a somewhat routine part of the Prague scene.

Already, though, they have issued their tenthanniversary anthology of underground writings, which appeared last week in Frankfurt. Increasingly, through their publishers in Lucerne, Frankfurt, Paris and New York, their words are reaching a widening audience abroad and becoming a growing annoyance to the Czechoslovak regime and to its Soviet masters. This annovance is only a small part of the negative balance sheet for the Kremlin leadership 10 years after the invasion.

In an immediate sense, of course, the invasion satisfied all of the Soviet aims. It removed a party hierarchy that was decidedly anti-Soviet, even to a degree anti-Communist. That hierarchy had gotten entirely out of control, threatening to turn Czechoslovakia into the only hostile country on the Soviet Union's Western borders and serving too as a sing-ularly bad example to forces agitating for similar reforms in Poland. Hungary and even East Germa-

The government of Gustav Husak still hews more closely to the Soviet line on both domestic and foreign policy than any other country in East-ern Europe, with the possible exception of Bulgar-ia. When relations chill between Moscow and gue to precisely the same temperature. When U.S. diplomats are denounced and harrassed in Moscow, as they were at the time of the recent dissi-dent trials, they are denounced in Czechoslovakia on nationwide television.

This unquestioning response to Soviet needs and wants was a goal of the Soviet military action 10 years ago. It worked here. But it failed almost everywhere else in Eastern Europe.

"1968 was supposed to serve as an example throughout Eastern Europe," said one Western diplomat. "The Brezhnev doctrine was coined to justify Czechoslovakia hut eight years later it was denounced by the rest of the Communist world. This certainly was not what Moscow had in mind." The Brezhnev docume held that the Soviet Union could intervene with force of arms if necessary to prevent any socialist country from deviating from Soviet norms. "All it did was make everyone else just a little more careful," the diplomat observed. There are some East European experts who hold that this was all that the Soviet Union ever expected from the invasion. But most believe that the Russians had not counted on the growing disquier in Poland and East Germany, where regimes in serious economie difficulty are unable to prevent the kind of dissent that the example of the Czecboslovak invasion was designed to curh.

And, though the Czecboslovak economy has become a model of advancement, as the Soviet Union come a model of advancement, as the Soviet Union intended, it is no longer the only model for the rest of Eastern Europe. Quietly, over the past 20 years since its own invasion, the Hungarian regime of Janos Kadar has, if anything surpassed Czechoslovakia in production of the kind of Western-orientation of the street of such supersisting that is the entry of such supersisting the supersisting that is the entry of such supersisting that is the entry of such supersisting that is the entry of such supersisting the supersisting that is the entry of such supersisting the supersisting that it is not such as the supersisting that it is not supersisting supersisting the supersisting that it is not supersisting the supersisting that it is not supersisting the supersisting that it is not supersisting the supersisting that it is not supersisting that it is not supersisting the supersisting the supersisting that it is not supersisting the supersisting the supersisting that it is not supersisting the supersi

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (NYT) - The stock market last week rose to its best level in slightly more than a year, then backtracked a bit because of coocerns about the falling American dollar and rising interest rates.

On Thursday, the Dow Jones industrial average edged above the 900 mark, which previously had provided a barrier to further progress. It finished that day at 900.12. On Friday, the Dow closed at 896.83, displaying a oet gain of 5.98 points during an eventful week.

Investor sentiment was buoyed in the final session by an encouraging announcement from Texaco, up % to 26 on Friday, concerning its exploratory well in the Baltimore Canyon off the New Jersey coast. On a comparative basis, the American Stock Exchange and the over-the-counter market fared better last week.

Continuing to reflect the popularity of smaller and less-seasooed stocks on the part of investors, the Amex set record highs, and the leading index of over-the-counter issues came close to setting a record.

Meanwhile, the big news in the securities markets was the stiffening in two critical rates. First, the federal funds rate, known as the cutting edge of all short-term rates, moved up a notch Wednesday to 8 percent, its highest level since 1974. This was the result of action by the Federal Reserve Board in a preliminary move to prop up the dollar. Then, shortly after the ooon hour on Friday, the Fed fired off an even bigger salvo in its battle to protect the American currency.

It raised the discount rate, or the rate at which member banks borrow mooey from the Fed itself, by a half-point to 7% percent, effective tomorrow. The nation's money manager said it took this step "in view of recent disorderly cooditions in foreign-exchange markets as well as the continuing serious domestic inflationary problem."

The immediate result of that rate increase was to send stock prices higher, but the equity market weakened later Friday afternoon.

Eurobonds Slip as U.S. Interest Rates Rise

By William Kucewicz

LONDON, Aug. 20 (AP-DJ) -An apparent increase in short-term U.S. interest rates, continued turbulence on the foreign-exchange market, and vague gestures of sup-port for the ailing dollar by U.S. officials left Eurodollar bond prices lower oo average last week.

Turnover fell markedly, in both the dollar and Deutsche mark sectors, as most retail elients took to the sidelines, leaving the market mainly to professional traders. "Customers have been frightened off by the currency volatility," one dealer remarked.

Holidays in various European centers Monday and Tuesday also accounted for part of the slackening of volume.

At the start of the week, Eurodollar bood prices held firm follow-ing the previous week's gains on the lingering belief that U.S. short-term interest rates had nearly peaked. Professionals willingly provided a floor for prices, absorbing any small selling. But as currency considerations intensified Tuesday, with the dollar scoring record lows against the Deutsche mark, Swiss franc and yen and gold reaching s oew high, prices were driven down by 4 to 3 point. The market grew nervous ahead of a meeting of the U.S. Federal Reserve System's policy-making arm, the Open Market Committee, amid speculation that U.S. credit conditions could be tight-ened in response to the dollar's weakness. Toward the end of the week, Eurodollar prices sank a further 1/2 to 4 point as it became evident that the Fed had raised the key rate on federal funds - the reserves banks lend one another - from 7% per-

The dollar drifted lower at the end of the week on initial disap-pointment over remarks by Mr. Carter oo the situation at a Washington news conference. Mr. Blumenthal said later a series of actions to deal with the dollar prob-lem was expected to be announced "over the next few weeks."

The administration's actions may be dooe soon to correct the fundamental weakness of the U.S. currency. But experts warned that the dollar could come under reoewed selling pressure if the market's bopes are dashed by an inefficacious response by U.S. authorities. "This whole thing could backfire," one trader cau-been cut even further, dealers said. U.S. trade performance subsided had it not been for the fact that the somewhat in the dollar debate amid interest rate increase tended to forecasts by several leading banks harden the dollar's exchange rate that the U.S. trade deficit will narrow in the second half of the year Losses of 1/2 to 1/2 or more were and into 1979 compared with a recorded over the week as a whole, $16.4-billion gap in the first six months of this year. Calls in Europe for quick implementation of a U.S. energy policy, for instance, were ooticeably less vociferous.

Instead, analysts are looking for action on the U.S. monetary and fiscal fronts to deal with the problems of expansive money-supply growth, a relatively high rate of in-flation and a continued large feder-al hudget deficit, projected at around $40 billion for the year commencing Oct. 1. A further rise in U.S. interest rates and measures to curh government expenditures are seen as possible remedies.

Further Cut Likely

The Fed announced late Friday an iocrease in the discount rate the fee it charges oo loans to mem-ber commercial banks — to 7.75 percent from 7.25 percent, effective tomorrow. The move is likely to result in a further cut in Eurodollar bond prices, dealers said.

NOTICE OF REDEMPTION RELIANCE WORLD TRADE COMPANY LTD. (formerly Leasco World Trade Company Ltd.)

This Notice Contains Important Information for All Holders of 5% Guaranteed Convertible Debentures Due 1988 of Reliance World Trade Company Ltd. (formerly Leasco World Trade Company

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN. that the entire outstanding principal amount of the above issue (hereinafter the "Debentures") will be redeemed on September 25, 1978 (the "Redemption Date"). The amount payable on redemption is $1028.89 per $1,000 principal amount of each Debenture ($1015.00 plus interest accrued to the Redemption Date). This action is being taken pursuant to the provisions of Section 3.02 of the Indenture dated as of June 15, 1968 among Leasco World Trade Company Ltd. (now Reliance World Trade Company Ltd.), Leasco Data Processing Equipment Corporation (now Reliance Group, Incorporated), Guarantor, and Bankers Trust Company as Trustee (the "Indenture").

The redemption payment will be made at the office of Bankers Trust Company and at the offices of the Paying Agents indicated below. From and after the Redemption Date, the Debentures shall no longer be deemed outstanding and interest thereon will cease to accrue.

In accordance with the provisions of the Indenture, the Debentures are convertible into shares of Common Stock of Reliance Group, Incorporated at a conversion price of $40.80 per share. This right of conversion will expire at the close of business on Monday, September 25, 1978. Thereafter, the Debentures may not be converted into such Common Stock. No payment or adjustment in respect of accrued interest shall be made on the conversion of any of the Debentures. If the entire outstanding principal amount of the Debentures were to be converted into Common Stock of Reliance Group, Incorporated at the above-stated conversion price, such conversion would involve the issuance of approximately 310,000 shares of such Common Stock.

Holders of Debentures should be aware of the following:

(1) On August 11, 1978, the reported closing sale price on the New York Stock Exchange of Reliance Group, Incorporated Common Stock was $35.625 per share. At $40.80 per share, $1,000 principal amount of Debentures would be converted into 24.5 shares of Reliance Group, Incorporated Common Stock having e value of $872.81.

(2) It is suggested that holders consult with their tax advisers as to the tax effect of the redemption and conversion discussed above.

Debentures, together with all coupons appertaining thereto and maturing after the Redemption Date. should be presented and surrendered for payment of the redemption amount or for conversion into Common Stock, as follows: Paying and Conversion Agent Mail:

Also Conversion Agent Banque Internationale a Luxembourg S.A. 2 Boulevard Royal Luxembourg, Luxembourg Also Conversion Agent

If you elect to convert your Debentures, the Debentures should be delivered to or sent by registered mail or its equivalent to the offices of Bankers Trust Company or the offices of the Conversion Agents indicated above prior to the expiration of the conversion right et the close of business on Monday, September 25, 1978, indicating your election to convert on the reverse thereof with an endorsement dated and signed by you. If the shares of Common Stock to be issued on conversion are to be registered in a name other than yours, so indicate and have your signature guaranteed by a banking institution. Fractional shares of Common Stock will not be issued on conversion. Reliance World Trade Company Ltd. or Reliance Group, Incorporated hereby elects, pursuant to the Indenture, to pay a cash adjustment in respect of fractional interests based on market price of the Common Stock as of the last business day preceding the date on which a Debenture is surrendered for conversion.

If you have any questions about the meaning of this Notice or the most advantageous way for you to respond to it, it is recommended that you consult your banker, broker or attorney.

national Airlines issue seemed to be trying to avoid a repetition of the events in the secondary market that befell a recent $25-million covertible issue by Coca-Cola Bottling of New York Finance N.V. The issue, with a 6.75-percent coupon, was priced at par but traded this week at 97.25-98.25.

The only straight Eurodollar bond signed last week was a $70million, 12-year floating-rate issue for Panama. It was well oversubscribed and priced at par, joint lead manager Dillon, Read Overseas Corp. said. Interest will be payable semiannually at a rate of 1 percentage point over the Londoo inter-bank offered rate (Libor) for six-month Eurodollar deposits, with a minimun rate of 7.0 percent.

EIB Plans Issue

Two Eurodollar offerings are scheduled. Frab Bank International will issue $25-million, floating-rate bonds, due 1986, carrying interest of 0.25 percent above Libor, with a minimum of 6.25 percent, managed by Societe Generale. European In-vestment Bank plans a $100-million issue, due 1990, jointly managed by Nikko Securities Co. and Credit Suisse-White Weld,

In the Deutsche mark sector, prices gained up to ½ point Mon-day following German central capital market approval of a 580-millioo DM, six-issue calendar for August. Thereafter, prices fluctuat-

Triple Crown Winner Fouls

Alydar Beats Affirmed on Jockey Error

By Gerald Strine

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. Aug. 20 (WP) — Alydar finally found a way to beat Affirmed as a 3-year-old yesterday — by having the Triple-Crown winner foul him.

The Travers Stakes was to be yet another test of these two brilliant colts, and it attracted a record Saratoga crowd of 50,122.

Laffit Pincay, substituting for injured Steve Cauthen, blindly permitted Affirmed to drop in sharply on Alydar and jockey Jorge Velasquez shortly after leaving the half-mile pole. Velasquez had to take the pole of the sterile pole. B. Stanley. Boston, 18-1, 30%; Guidry, New York, 17-2, 375; Gura, Kanses City, 19-3, 749; Eckersley. Second money of $23,056 only served to get Affirmed closer.

Ordinarily, one might ask why

Alydar earned $62,880 of the appeared as though Alydar might have suffered a serious injury, so drastie was the effect of Affirmed's

The incident cost Alydar perhaps as much as four lengths, before Velasquez could gather the Calumet Farm colt again. Affirmed breezed into a comfortable lead. Alydar charged after the leader, but never got closer than the length and Advantage Shown three-quarters that separated the two at the finish.

Inquiry Sign

Affirmed easily held off Alydar through the stretch but the stew-ards immediately flashed the inquiry sign and, a few minutes later, Velasquez lodged an objection. The stewards oeeded less than 10 min-utes to reach a decision. Alydar was placed first, Affirmed second.

The adjudicated results marked the first time that Alydar has beaten Affirmed this year, following tosses in the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont Stakes. Affirmed's lead in the "match" series, over two seasons, is 7-3.

"The way it happened today, the satisfaction of winning is greatly diminished." trainer John Veitch observed. "What Pincay la California-based rider] did today might be the way they ride in California. That might be the style there, but you don't get away with that sort of

"We didn't want to win it this way," Velasquez echoed. Then, visibly shaken, the Panamian moved off into a corner of the jockeys' room saying, "Please excuse me. I'm very upset right now."

Pincay referred to the disqualification as "a borderline call" by the steward. "I thought there was enough room for Alydar to get through," he said. "He was going through a blind spot."

The blind spot was Pincay's, He had deliberately taken Affirmed well off the inside rail, moving up the backstretch, Shake Shake Shake was second at that point. Velasquez, rather than take Alydar outside two horses, and losing ground, chose to take the opening Affirmed's rider had created.

"Jorge told me he was within an inch of being dropped, when Af-firmed came over like that," Veitch declared. "It was bad riding on Pincay's part. Once Affirmed got the lead he should have stayed right

Australia Rugby Loss

WELLINGTON, Aug. 20 (1HT)

New Zealand's All Blacks beat visiting Australia yesterday, 13-12, in the first of three Rugby Union tests. New Zealand led, 10-6, at

The Friday and Saturday baseball line scores were no available for publication in this edition because of transmission difficulties.

Ordinarily, one might ask why Velasquez elected to go into the in-side "trap" set by Pincay. But in this instance he had little room to go elsewhere, since Affirmed and Shake Shake Shake had drifted out toward the middle of the racing

The Travers, if oothing else, showed how much of an advantage a rider on Affirmed has over a rider of Alydar when they meet in this series of mini-matches. Affirmed is the speedier, the shiftier, the more tractable, the more versatile. His rider can always dictate strategy and tactics. But yesterday, Veitch observed, "Pincay went to sleep when his horse took the lead."

Affirmed was attempting, had he won, to succeed Secretariat as thoroughbred racing's greatest singleseason money-winner. Secretarias

A TIME FOR TRUTH

By William E. Simon. Reader's Digest Press/McGraw-Hill. 248 pp. $12.50.

Reviewed by Steven Rattner

IN APRIL, 1975, then-Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simoo led a delegation of U.S. officials to the Soviet Union to discuss cials to the Soviet Union to discuss trade matters. At the conclusion of the two-day meeting, the American group boarded Air Force Two for the trip home. As the jet lifted off and the 80 passengers realized they were nn longer on Soviet soil, the group spontaneously burst into applause. For Simon, it was a most poignant demonstration of the poignant demonstration of the sense of freedom.

On that occasion, the talk was of political freedom, but the experience soon led Simon - by his account - to reflect on economic freedom and to conclude that economic freedom is a key — perhaps the key — constituent of political freedom, and that if the former is lost, the latter is sure to follow. Such is the strident message of this combined political memoir and ide-ological exhortation.

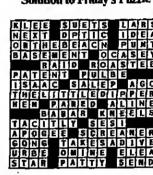

"In sum, individual liberty in-cludes the individual's economic freedom and the Founding Fathers knew it." Simon says. "They had good reason to leave the productive activities of men as free as possible." Meanwhile, in Simon's view, this ideal is being corrupted, as the disease that began in Europe known as social democracy — rising government involvement in the national economy -- spreads to the United States.

There follows a litany of familiar themes about economic disaster, arrived and pending. Government's share of the Gross National Product has risen from 12 percent in 1930 to 36 percent in 1976. Federal spending bas increased 232 percent from 1961 to 1975. The Social Security system could be short as much as $4 trillion. Regulation in 1975 cost $130 billion. Business profits and capital investment have been disappointing. And so on If none of this sounds particularly oew, it's because it isn't, but in the hands of Simon, principal flag carrier for the nation's rightist ecocomic faction, it assumes a new vibrancy.

But as far as the current popular mood is concerned, Simon seems to overstate the need to swing the pen-dulum in the other direction, had he chosen a more measured route, some of his points would have been persuasive.

Yes, there is too much regulation and, more importantly, too much bad regulation — but some regula-tion will always be needed. Yes, the danger of encroaching British so-cial democracy is real — but gov-erament must continue to work against gross disparities in the dis-tribution of wealth. Yes, some of our fiscal irresponsibility, such as with Social Security, must be checked — but not if the result would be to plunge the country into a depression. And yes, government is too big — one of Simon's most interesting

citations is of a computation that if the increase in expenditures no so-cial programs between 1965 and 1975 were distributed directly to the poor as cash, each poor person would receive $8,000 a year. But here as elsewhere, Simon's selfnete as elsewhere, Simin's setting theous tone makes agreeing with him most difficult. (As with so many other first-person tales." A Time for Truth" lacks narrative vigor and literary quality).

For someone so fixated on the notion of freedom, Simon's book has an anti-democratic strain. His most venomous attacks are re-served for Congress and he suggests that effective action can never come from B body as divisive and as divided as the legislature. He yearns for authoritative decisionmaking, free from political considerations and political constraints. but he decides the long tortuous process that has evolved over 200 years and whose deliberative nature is largely responsible for preserving our freedom.

Whatever other purpose the book may serve, it readily suggests to the most sympathetic reader that President Gerald Ford's secretary of the treasury lacked even basic political skills and felt himself mis-cast in his role. If there is still talk these days of a Simoo gubernatorial or vice presidential candidacy, it could only be as cocktail-party fodder. "As often as not, I felt like burling a brick at some of those gentlemen whom I once described in an unguarded moment as 'those coconuts on the Hill,' "he writes.

Two other irksome points: Only passing reference is made to the fact that business orought many of its current regulatory headaches on itself by virtue of irresponsible be-havior in decades past. Also, it has become the vogue in Republican circles to maintain that the conservauve objection to government programs is not that they are too large, but that they are ineffective, pro-grams to help the poor actually help the middle class, Simon con-tends. This strikes me as highly disingenuous, for it suggests that if money went more directly to the poor, Republicans would sup-port the programs, which is highly unlikely.

Simon's book is not without a program for action, but the program is as extreme as the analysis. "The principle of 'no taxation with-out representation," and "The concept that 'wealth is theft' must he repudiated," is one typical sug-gestion. This could be accomplished, in part, Simon says, by business directing its money to foundations, universities and media that support its goals. Fortunately. few have yet takeo Simon's recommendations to heart.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 — Once again in the 12th game of the world championship chess match in Baguio City, the Philippines, the titleholder, Anatoly Karpov of the Soviet Union, attacked the bastions of the county of the Champion attacked the Payer I. of the open defense to the Ruy Lo-pez that his challenger, Viktor Kor-chnoi, has been setting up, and once again the defense beld for a Korchnoi, the leading anthority on the open defense, has been rewriting his commentary on it in the pages of Volume I of "The En-cyclopedia of Chess Openings" each time he uses it to baffle Karpov. By now Karpov should be get-ting wise to the fact that, in every variation that the encyclopedia re-commends as favoring White, Kor-chnoi has secret improvements rehabilitating the defense.

The only time Korchnoi failed with the open defense was in the eighth game, when he deliberately tried an absurdly risky line and was

In the secood and fourth games, Karpov played the orthodox 9 P-B3, and in the eighth and 10th games, he used the rare 9 QN-Q2. In the 12th game, he tried the Howells attack with 9 Q-K2, clearing a square for 10 R-Q1 to exert pressure on the Queen file.

Well Known

It is well known that Black can slip away from the Queen file with 14. .Q-N1 since 15 BxQP?, BxB; 16 RxB, QxP costs White material. Of course, Black was left with the weakness of his isolated QP, but Korchnoi balanced that by the artificial isolation of the White KP with 2I. . .P-KN4.

After 25. . B-B5, Karpov might have maintained the extra pawn with 26 P-B4. His alternative, 26 N-N3, BxN; 27 RxB, NxP; 28 R-Q5 also won a pawn, for 28. . P-B3 would have permitted 29 N-K4. K. Marsikov Retains Women's Title At Canadian Tennis Championship

TORONTO, Aug. 20 (UPI) — Regina Marsikova won her second consecutive women's title and topseed Eddie Dihbs and upset winner Jose Luis Clerc yesterday moved into the men's final at the Canadian Open tennis championship. Marsikova, 19, outlasted Virginia Ruzici, 7-5, 6-7, 6-2 in hot, humid weather. Marsikova used superior strength to push Ruzici back from the baseline, hitting from side to side to tire her out.

Dibbs, the world's fifth-ranked player, came from behind to beat Chris Lewis, 6-4, 3-6, 7-5, and move into today's men's final.

Clerc reached the final by upset-ting Brian Gottfried, 5-7, 7-5, 6-4. in the other semifinal. Marsikova went up 5-3 in the second set and had two match points before the wiry Romanian dug in and took three straight games. In the oe-breaker, Marsiko-va had another four match points against the exhausted Ruzici hut failed to put it away.

Ruzici threw away the next game on unforced errors and Marsikova caught her second wind and went on to win.

In the first men's semifinal match, Dibbs punished Lewis for his forays to the net with accurate passing shots and maintained the pressure with his own charges. Dihbs fell behind at the beginning of every set, fighting back from a 3-0 deficit in the third to defeat Lew-the single off reliever Charlie Hough that helped the Mets to their second victory in eight games.

Reds 9, Cubs 7

At Chicago, singles by Mike Lum and pitcher Tom Hume in the 10th inning led Cincinnati to an uphill 9-7 victory over Chicago. Dan Driessen opened the Cincinnati 10th with a single and, when right fielder Bobby Murcer dropped Johnny Bench's line drive, Driessen was forced at second. Dave Concepcion singled before Lum's fourth hit of the game scored Beach. Hume then singled bome two more runs through a drawn-in infield.

Padres 3, Expos 2

At Montreal, Randy Jones and Rollie Fingers combined on a fivehitter and Jones knocked in the winning run with a sixth-inning sin-gle as San Diego posted a 3-2 victo-ry over Montreal. Jones, 11-11, allowed two unearned runs over seven innings before yielding to Fingers, who extended his majorleague-leading save total to 28.

Pirates 4, Astros 2

At Pittsburgh, Frank Taveras stole three bases and scored two runs, leading Pittsburgh to its fifth straight victory, a 4-2 decision over Houston in the first game of a doubleheader. The second game was postponed because of rain and was rescheduled for today as part of a doubleheader.

Outbursts Linked to Alcohol

Fan Rowdyism Spreads in U.S.

By George Vecsey

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (NYT) -Baseball helmets are normally worn to protect against a pitcher's fast-ball, hut Richie Zisk and Bohhy Bonds of the Texas Rangers recently donned their hard hats to protect themselves from spark plugs, ice cubes and firecrackers tossed by Chicago White Sox fans, Baseball has not yet had to resort to Latin American and European soccer teams' practice of using mosts and screens to separate athletes from fans, but something akin to that may be needed someday. "I can see the day coming when we'll have to fence off the lower stands to protect the players," said the Chicago manager, Larry Doby.

That might avert incidents like to the park. The gentler people have the option of staying home, while the rowdier fans, willing to put up with one another, continue to flock to the stadiums.

Baltimore fans heaving hot does at Reggie Jackson, a San Francisco fan dropping a cherry bomb near George Foster, Yankee lans dump-ing garbage on relief pitchers coming in from the bull pen and Cincinnati fans pouring beer on Bob Watson after he crashed into the outfield fence.

Although some suburhanites grumble about having to travel to the old neighborhoods, such as those around Tiger Stadium in Detroit and Yankee Stadium in the Bronx, it is generally not the urban poor who are the problems inside the park. At Yankee Stadium a large, number of those arrested or ejected come from outlying areas, drinking all the way.

Too Much Alcohol

Ralph Snyder, director of opera-tions for Tiger Stadium, said: They come to the stadium half cranked-up already. Ninety-five percent of our problems can be attributed to people who come in here and get too much to drink."

Drinking seems to be the main problem in the stands. One of the few forfeits of recent decades occurred in Cleveland a few years ago, when management cut the price of beer one night and fans disrupted the game.

Baseball has had connections with beer since the early profesand use language that used to be sional teams were owned by too strong for the street. There has breweries. Most clubs warn that anybody arrested for disturbing a game may be fined ($50 or $100) by the local court, and most are becoming strict. In Arlington, Texas, recently a man unintendenally fell onto the field while trying to catch a foul ball in the box seats, and he was escorted out of the stadium.

Many clubs say vandalism is not a major problem, although all suffer an occasional rampage. David Schaffer, director of park opera-tions at Chicago's Comiskey Park, said: "Last year a kid pulled some of the plumbing apart in a washroom, and that cost a couple of hundred dollars. Kids scratch their names on walls. But it's not wide-spread. We can have a crowd of 40,000 and not sustain damage." Yankee Stadium fans seem to get the worst marks from American League players, ever since the old stuffiness of Yankee fans gave way to a "we're No. 1" mentality.

Britt celebrated its centennial a week ago and held the town's 78th annual hobos' convention, at which riders of the rails from East and West gather in beartland America. But there are not many bobos here, two dozen at best, camped at what they call "the jungle," a little sheltered area just beside the white wooden building that serves as the freight depot for the Milwaukee Line.

Since the '30s

"There's just not much hoboing left to do," said the Cheyenne Kid, 68, who has been hitching freights since the '30s. "Diesel engines killed it. Used to be a train would have to stop every so often to pick up water and coal. Now they just thunder on for a thousand miles, and the cars are so stream-lined and locked shut you can't get in."

The Kid said that in the '30s, "there must have been lifteen, eighteen thousand of us roaming around. The Depression had a lot to do with it. Now I'd be surprised if there

"You can't just go around and do odd jobs anymore," said Lord Open Road.
"Used to be you could go up to the house of a widow and offer to paint the place in re-turn for room and board. No questions asked. Now you occd to have what they call credentials, and if you don't have your own paint truck, they're suspicious. And just forget about staying in somebody's house who don't know you."

"The world's just turned into a hunch of working stiffs," said Steamtrain Maury, just elected king of the hobos hy the people of Brit. "It's harder and harder to understand us folks who don't seem to do anything."

Indeed, there is an ironic contrast forced hy the mixing of the hobo convention and the town's centennial. Like cowboys and bank rohbers, the hobos - with names like Iowa Blackie, Frypan Jack and Boxcar

Frank — conjure up the great romantic spirit of itinerant America, the forerunners of writer Jack Keronac's Beat Generation and the flowery days of the '60s counterculture.

"Being important is not that damn important," said Mr. Nobody. "But we have our vanity."

Then there's Britt, the very model of America's Protestant ethic. The first edition of the town's Britt Tribune, on Dec. 19, 1879, noted that "Britt is fast becoming the commercial center of the county and is drawing trade from every direction," largely because of the three railroad lines that cross bere. "The husinessmen are well endowed with enterprise and 'go-aheaditiveness.'

Ninety-nine years later, the two-hour-long centennial parade was filled with almost 100 floats, most of them touting God, gravy or government. There was a covered wagon being pulled by four small John Deere tracbeing pulled by four small John Deere trac-tors, all harnessed together. A horse dressed in overalls. A family of five in their old Model T with a sign proclaiming: "High spending is inflationary. Living high on the hog will destroy America." A Veterans of Foreign Wars display was a model of the Lincoln Memorial, with a Lincoln look-alike who had been greasepainted completely white. An old steam tractor driven by "Grandpa Harry Thompson, 89 years young." The Methodist Church had a sign declaring "There is new life in Christ"

A man from the VFW circulated through the parade route, selling tiny American

"Folks, let's make it look like America today," he said. Oivind Andreassen, in Britt from Fredrikstad, Norway, to visit relatives, handed over a quarter and stuck the flag oo his camera case.

At noon, after the parade, in an empty lot, hobos and townsfolk, sightseers and relatives gathered for the free Mulligan-stew lunch that was prepared by the Chamber of Commerce. Eight hundred gallons of stew were cooked in 55-gallon drums. It was a traditional part of the bobo convention, which, even when started at the turn of the century, was a clever husiness move hy the merchants of Britt.

Through 1899 the hobos (who call their organization Tourists Union 63) had a meeting in Illinois. Three Britt merchants, Thomas Way, T.A. Potter and W.E. Bradford, realizing the importance of the railroads and publicity for the town's economy, invited the "officers" of the union to Britt and proposed that an annual convention be held bere in August. The town, in conjunction with the Britt Trihune, invited journalists from across the land, and on Aug. 23, 1900
— the day after the first convention — the town of Britt was on the front pages of newspapers across the country.

"It was advertising that Britt was after, and she got it," editor W.A. Simkins wrote in the local paper, in an article hinting that the town, in conjunction with the journalists, had pulled a fast one on the world.

"A convention's just a convention," said the Cheyenne Kid. "People say they used us, but we used them. It's just that this town still has three train lines running through, and it's a handy place to meet." The Kid is full of stories.

"Once I was riding the Silk Express from San Francisco to the East Coast. I'm going San Francisco to the East Coast. I'm going back now 45 years. That train was hringing raw silk to someplace in New England. I mean that train was carrying a million dollars. Something didn't feel right, and I jumped off. I didn't realize at the time that she was so hot. They catch you on a train like that they put you right in jail, thinking you're gonna hijack it.

"A pother time near Duluth I was sleeping

"Another time near Duluth I was sleeping in a boxcar behind a load of logs. I ooticed these red, diamond-shaped stickers on the outside of one of the cars. Forty tons of dynamite. That was '30 or '31. Got off that one fast. "I got into this the hard way, 1927, when I was knee-high to a grasshopper," said Lord Open Road. "I'd go down to the tracks when my Dad wasn't looking and sneak a ride for a mile. The neighbors would tell my Dad, and be'd beat the bell out of me. Final I decided I'd had enough beatings, and I dn't jump off after a mile.

"Now my constitution is as strong as a domesticated bovine. But you're going across the desert and you've gotta have water. I jumped off by this casis and was pushing back all that green scum for the coolest drink in the whole world. Then this rancher come up on me with a gun, says he wants a dollar-lifty for a drink. I said to him, 'I thought water was free.' We starting talking and after a while be said to me, 'Are you in a hurry? I'd like to have dinner with you. And I started laughing and I said to him, 'Me in a hurry? Took me nine mooths to get here.

The stories could go on all night. But it was getting dark, and the stewpot was hubbling in the jungle, and the Cheyenne Kid was getting mohbed by autograph hounds in the Red Rooster Lounge.

"Jeepers, creepers," he said, "This is the rat race we're all trying to avoid,"

And the Kid headed out of the Red Rooster and the Rooster an ster back to the "jungle," and in the process he met Pennsylvania Pete, who glanced around at the crowd and said: "Lotta people call themselves a tramp, but they couldn't be one with an instruction book."

Rosalynn Carter Uplifted PEOPLE: Rosalynn Carter Oping. By a Birthday Surprise

. . . going home

Jimmy Carter took some time out for brotherly competition dur-ing the family weekend, beating hrother Billy's softball team 6-5. At the last out, pitcher Carter threw his glove into the air and grinned. President Carter, wearing cutoff blue jeans, a navy blue shirt, a blue baseball cap and white sneakers, pitched the nine innings in 90-degree weather. Billy started as a pitcher hut after several beers he dropped out to coach and cajole his team, mostly newsmen. "I like to pitch, but I can't hit," said the presdent, who got on base once on a walk. His squad was made up mostly of secret service agents and aides, including Adm. William Lakesh, the White House physi-

Julie Nixon Eisenhower and her bushand David have taken their daughter Jennie, who was born Tuesday, home from the hospital. The couple posed hriefly with the hahy for photographers at the door of San Clemente General Hospital in California and then a city policeman pushed Mrs. Eisenhow wheelchair to their car. The family left for their home in Capistrano

Robert and Susan Dodge have become parents, and that's news because Dodge, who twice received new hearts, is the first heart-transplant recipient to become a father. Dodge, 20, of Los Angeles, underwent transplant surgeries in 1975 and 1976. Since then, he has been taking large doses of steroids to prevent his body from rejecting the second transplanted organ. Dr. Gary London, who delivered the child, Sandra Jo, at a Van Nuysarea hospital Saturday, said the hirth is unusual because steroids usually lower or interfere with sperm production. He said that be-cause of the drugs, there had been City newspaper strike, some concern about birth defects but child was born normal. "We think it's the first birth of its kind in the world," London said. "This guy is unusually young to have a transplant, and it shows transplant patients can lead normal lives." * * *

it's enough to make you want to scuff his white bucks. Singer Par Boone has admitted that neither he nor his family ever tried Acne-Statin, a mail-order acne medication he advertises. In radio and television commercials, Boone said his daughters had suffered from acne,
"but our girls got lasting help with Acne-Statin." That endorsement led Joy Hunt of Dallas to try the product, she said in a suit, but she contended that it gave her perma-nent scars and blisters. She charged Boone and Karr Preventative Medicine Inc. with negligence and false representations. Boone's admission was made in answers to the suit filed in U.S. District Court.

The higgest crowd at the symposium on water problems at Vail, Colo., about 150, showed up to hear a sewer commissioner from Provo Canyon, Utah. His name is Robert Redford. "Too often there is a stereotyped image about what an actor is and too often it means giving up citizenship papers," said Redford dressed in jeans and boots. The actor, who lives in a solar house, said that he has attended Vail Symposiums since 1974. In his speech at the meeting, Redford said that orderly development is oeeded and "technology is not out of coutrol with the natural balance of

"I'd never have known about the Hockney show, if I hadn't read the ad..."

This person read the ad, as it happens, in the art pages of the Herald Tribune - Europe's only international daily newspaper, the one with really serious coverage of Europe's far-flung world of art.

And people seriously interested in art - the buyers, the collectors - read its pages regularly. For editorial content as well as for the ads from galleries and auction houses.

Indeed, if you have a gallery, or want to sell a collection, or promote attendance at a museum, the International Herald Tribune may well be your best bet.

You'll see...
